

Did You Know? Our Ancient Throne

Our Royal Family and Throne have been around for a really long time, since ancient Saxon times. But what many people might not know is that our Royal House is connected to something even more significant – the Royal Family of ancient Israel, called the House of David.

Records show that our Royal Family's lineage goes through the Kings of Scotland, who themselves trace back to the ancient Kings of Ireland.

And guess what? The Irish Kings can be traced all the way back to Tea Tephi, the daughter and heir of Zedekiah, the last King of Judah. Since the Royal Family of Judah was the House of David, it means our Royal House is the continuation of the House of David, and our ancient Throne is the Throne of David.

This connection is super important because it's tied to a promise made by God in ancient times. God promised David that his house and kingdom would last forever, and this promise is something God takes very seriously.

In the 89th Psalm, God made it clear that He has a covenant with David, swearing to establish his seed and build up his throne for all generations. This covenant, along with God's oath, means that the House and Throne of David must still exist today and have been

Did You Know? Our Ancient Throne

Our Royal Family and Throne have been around for a really long time, since ancient Saxon times. But what many people might not know is that our Royal House is connected to something even more significant – the Royal Family of ancient Israel, called the House of David.

Records show that our Royal Family's lineage goes through the Kings of Scotland, who themselves trace back to the ancient Kings of Ireland.

And guess what? The Irish Kings can be traced all the way back to Tea Tephi, the daughter and heir of Zedekiah, the last King of Judah. Since the Royal Family of Judah was the House of David, it means our Royal House is the continuation of the House of David, and our ancient Throne is the Throne of David.

This connection is super important because it's tied to a promise made by God in ancient times. God promised David that his house and kingdom would last forever, and this promise is something God takes very seriously.

In the 89th Psalm, God made it clear that He has a covenant with David, swearing to establish his seed and build up his throne for all generations. This covenant, along with God's oath, means that the House and Throne of David must still exist today and have been continuous for about 3,000 years. And guess what? Our Royal House is the only one old enough to fit the bill.

But here's the big reveal – the Throne of David wasn't just David's; it was the Lord's. When God formed Israel into a nation, He said, "Ye shall be unto ME a kingdom." So, the Throne belonged to God. Even the Queen of Sheba acknowledged this when she saluted Solomon, saying, "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on His throne."

How's this:

According to prophetic Scriptures, this Throne is supposed to be occupied eventually by the Son of God, who would come through a virgin of the Royal House of David. That means our British Throne, being the continuation of the Throne of David, is the Throne of the Lord. The angel Gabriel confirmed this to Mary, saying that the Lord God would give Jesus the throne of his father David, and he would reign over Israel forever.

So, it's pretty clear that those who want to break our connection with the Mother Country and rebel against the Throne are not just going against tradition – they're going against the declared Will and Purpose of God. Our Throne is not just a symbol; it's part of a grand plan that involves Jesus, our Savior, reigning from it over Israel and the world.

Did You Know?

In Exodus 28 from verse 21, twelve precious stones were chosen to represent each tribe of Israel. In the exact order, they were placed on the Priest's breastplate.

In the same way, on the Coronation Crown of the Monarch, there are 12 precious stones placed in this exact same order. The Royal Throne of King David.

continuous for about 3,000 years. And guess what? Our Royal House is the only one old enough to fit the bill.

But here's the big reveal – the Throne of David wasn't just David's; it was the Lord's. When God formed Israel into a nation, He said, "Ye shall be unto ME a kingdom." So, the Throne belonged to God. Even the Queen of Sheba acknowledged this when she saluted Solomon, saying, "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on His throne."

How's this:

According to prophetic Scriptures, this Throne is supposed to be occupied eventually by the Son of God, who would come through a virgin of the Royal House of David. That means our British Throne, being the continuation of the Throne of David, is the Throne of the Lord. The angel Gabriel confirmed this to Mary, saying that the Lord God would give Jesus the throne of his father David, and he would reign over Israel forever.

So, it's pretty clear that those who want to break our connection with the Mother Country and rebel against the Throne are not just going against tradition – they're going against the declared Will and Purpose of God. Our Throne is not just a symbol; it's part of a grand plan that involves Jesus, our Savior, reigning from it over Israel and the world.

Did You Know?

In Exodus 28 from verse 21, twelve precious stones were chosen to represent each tribe of Israel. In the exact order, they were placed on the Priest's breastplate.

In the same way, on the Coronation Crown of the Monarch, there are 12 precious stones placed in this exact same order. The Royal Throne of King David.

